Who is rugby league's greatest referee?

There have been many contenders over the years: George Bishop, Darcy Lawler, Keith Page, Mick Stone, Gary Cook and Greg Hartley. But for mine, it's between Col Pearce or Bill Harrigan.

Born 43 years apart, they were so different in so many ways. But where it counted on the paddock, they were both top-shelf whistlers.

Pearce – very calm, very polite, very methodical – refereed 343 games between 1947 and 1968, with six grand finals and nine Tests.

Harrigan – very flamboyant, very controversial, very flexible – refereed 392 games from 1986 to 2003, with 10 grand finals, 21 Origins and 25 Tests. All records. Chalk and cheese alright, but both earned the respect of the players – the ultimate litmus test. But Pearce had the more interesting career, highlighted by the world record 11 successive premierships by the Dragons from 1956 to 1966. Pearce refereed them right through their reign, including the 1964, 65, and 66 grand finals.

That domination prompted a major change from unlimited tackles to the four-tackle rule to stop the Dragons owning the ball for most of the 80 minutes.

It was a culture shock for every player, referee, and fan, but the move proved successful. The Dragons didn't win another premiership for eight years. Four clubs – Manly, Souths, Balmain, and Easts – shared the spoils in that period.

Pearce also refereed in an era of no Sunday play. The match-of-the-day was always at the SCG – St George virtually lived there – and the media coverage was just a fraction of what it is today. The four-tackle rule became six in 1972, and Origin kicked off in 1980, both before Harrigan began his stellar career.

Pearce was a regular on Rex Mossop's famous "Controversy Corner" panel every Sunday on Channel 7, with Ferris Ashton, Noel Kelly, and SMH chief league writer Alan Clarkson, was an expert commentator on 2UE, and a Sydney Morning Herald columnist.

But to give Harrigan his credit, he was among those who were instrumental in Origin becoming the showpiece of rugby league, outstripping the premiership and internationals for media and fan interest, even though it's only three games a season.

But both gave sterling service over long periods to the 13-man code as referees.

The best? Col Pearce by a whisker in a photo finish.

Welcome

In October 2012 I was on holidays from a long winter rugby league season and was looking forward to what I perceived would be a well-earned rest.

Fast forward 12 months and I have had the privilege of working with a resilient, motivated group of match officials. I have spoken to many people over the course of the year explaining the style of person that undertakes this understated and undervalued role in rugby league. To be honest, I'm not sure I can pigeon hole any one style. The fraternity of match officials is certainly unique in their make-up but I have never had any concern of their application to their craft.

I have developed a genuine respect for part time and full time match officials who rival any other rugby league group for their love of the game. To be invisible but relevant on a rugby league field with up to 14 cameras is hard to come by but nevertheless remains a weekly quest.

Congratulations must go to our 'milestone' achievers of 2013. Whether it is your debut, 50 or 100, these are to be remembered and celebrated. A special note to the new members of the '300 Club'. Steve Carrall now holds the NRL touch judge career caps of 331 and rising as well as Shayne Hayne with 303 NRL refereeing appearances and Russell Turner with 322 NRL touch judge caps.

Congratulations to all award recipients tonight and our 2013 Rugby League World Cup representatives Shayne Hayne, Ben Cummins, Ashley Klein and Grant Atkins. Congratulations also to Henry Perenara who will represent New Zealand in the 2013 RLWC.

Thank you to all members of the Elite Refereeing ranks for their effort and performance. Special mention to Todd Greenberg, Nathan McGuirk, Tony Archer, Russell Smith, Don Stuart, Cam Black, Michelle Minichiello, Bernie Sutton and Steve Chiddy for their contribution.

Rugby League at the professional level will bring plenty of everything in 2014 but plans are in place for the match officials to make further improvements again. Enjoy your break

Daniel Anderson
